When the sheep returns, he has had all of his wool shaved off. All of the animals that used to love him and his dancing now laugh at him.

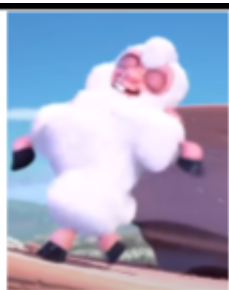

A jackalope hops along and sees the sad sheep on his travels. He stops to ask the sheep what's wrong. The sheep explains why he is sad, and the jackalope cheers him up by teaching him how to bound.

The sheep's wool grows back, and all of his animal friends now join him in bounding across the desert. The sheep no longer minds when the truck takes him to have his wool shaved off.

All of the animals love to join in with the sheep's dancing, when suddenly a truck appears. A hand reaches out, grabs the sheep and throws him in the back of the truck.

In a desert, there lived many small animals. On a rock, a sheep emerged, showing off his glossy, white wool, who began dancing.
